2. To be eligible for the grand prize, entries must be made available for use at Shire events and/or the Shire Pennsic camp. (There will be prizes available for those who submit something if it is to be used at a household camp, Royal camp, or for their own use at events, but purpose of this contest is to encourage the creation of Shire items.)

4. Items need not actually use the Shire colors or heraldry, but that will be considered.
5. Items should be on display at Shire Twelfth Night. If for some reason an item can not be present, a representation may be permitted.

Prizes and judges are not yet known.

Any questions? Please just let me know!

TIC TAC CHEC

by Lord Rubyn MakDonald of the Barony of Rhydderich Hael

This is a small modern variant of Chess that is commercially available, invented by a games designer named Don Green. It is essentially a cross between Chess and Tic Tac Toe, played on a 4 x 4 checkered board.

Each player has a Bishop, a Rook, a Knight and a Pawn. The pieces move as follows:

The Bishop moves diagonally in any direction any number of squares. Once a Bishop is placed on specific colored square it must stay on that color unless removed and replaced.

The Rook moves orthogonally in any direction any number of squares.

The Knight jumps in an L-shaped path, moving 2 squares orthogonally and then shifting over 1 additional square in a 90° turn. Pieces occupying the two squares jumped over are unaffected.

The Pawn moves one square orthogonally in any direction, but captures one square diagonally in any direction. Pawns do not promote to anything should they reach the edge of the board. There is no capturing "en passant." (In traditional Chess, Pawns only move forwards. Since the board for this variant is so small and pieces can be dropped into the game on any square, however, there really is no fixed "forward" direction.)

Players take turns either placing a piece onto the board, or moving a piece that is already on the board. Players can capture each other's pieces, but the captured pieces are returned to the owning player; the owning player may then return them to the board on a following turn. Players may also use blocking strategy to delay an opponent's movements towards the goal.

The player who is first to line up all four of his chessmen in any direction (orthogonally or diagonally) is the winner.

HOW TO MAKE IT

Basic parts:

a square wooden plaque or board 8" x 8" or bigger
2 wooden clothespins (the spring type)

- 1 wooden dowel 1" thick
- 2 wooden spools approximately 1½" tall
(anything between 1 and 2 inches will do)
- 2 wooden spools 1" tall
- 2 wooden candle cups approximately 5/8" in size
- Elmer's wood glue
- Elmer's wood filler

Basic tools:

- Ruler
- Protractor or T-square
- Pencil and white rubber eraser
(more effective than regular rubber erasers)
- Dremel cutting and sanding tool,
or any tool(s) that can do similar tasks
- Drill with very thin drill bit
- Sandpaper
- Black acrylic paint and paintbrush
- Pyrography (wood-burning) tool

The wooden parts and wood-burning tool can easily be obtained in the wood crafts section of any major crafts supply store (AC Moore or Michaels). The wood glue and wood filler can be gotten at home improvement stores (Lowe's or Home Depot).

The Board:

Using the ruler and protractor/T-square, draw a grid lightly in pencil on the wooden board. The grid should be 4 squares by 4 squares, each square measuring 2" x 2". Use the white rubber eraser in case of mistakes. Then use the pencil to lightly shade the squares you want to be dark. Then use the wood-burning tool to burn along the grid lines (best to use the tip that resembles a wedge). Then switch to a flat leaf-spade tip and carefully burn the squares marked for darkening.

SAFETY NOTE: Please use care with the wood-burning tool. Read the tool's instructions carefully. Always turn off or unplug the tool when not in use to reduce the risk of an accident. Allow the deactivated tool to cool down for at least five minutes before attempting to switch the burning tips. Use a pair of metal pliers to screw and unscrew the tips into the head of the tool.

The Chessmen:

Bishop: Twist one of the clothespins apart so that the wooden pieces slip free of the metal spring. Apply glue lightly to the flat side of one of the wooden pieces and press it against the flat side of the other piece so that it forms a long narrow spire-shape. When the glue dries, sand the edges and the pointed end smooth, then cut the whole piece 2 inches away from the pointed end. This creates a square bottom. Cut a thin disc from the dowel (about ¼" thick), sand it smooth and glue the square bottom of the clothespin to its center. Then cut a small diagonal slit somewhere near the peak of the spire, being careful not to cut all the way through (best to do this on one of the vertical sides rather than the sloping diagonal sides).

Knight: Fill the hole in a 1½" spool with wood filler, making sure that the hole is packed fully. Allow to dry for about 24 hours. Sand any excess filler away from the spool's ends. Using the Dremel or similar tool, sand down the sides of the spool's cylindrical shape until you have two parallel flat sides. Then sand one of the curved sides to create a concave area; this concave area should take up only half the length of the spool and be no deeper than half the thickness of the spool. You may need to sand some parts of the flat sides as well. The goal is to create a general suggestion of a thick head atop a neck. When you are satisfied with the shape, use the drill to create eye holes on the flat sides of the "head."

Rook: Cut slits in one end of the 1" spool in a cross-like pattern. This is to give a general impression of a castle's crenellations.

Pawn: Simply turn the candle cups upside down so that the openings are on the bottom. No sanding or cutting is required.

When all the chessmen have been built, paint one set of them black and leave the other plain.

“Freezin’ for a Reason”

At the 2009 WNY Polar Plunge, on December 6th, 410 ‘plungers’ jumped into Lake Erie at Hamburg Town Park to raise over $160,000 for the WNY Special Olympics. Pictured is Lord Dagonell and Snowball mere moments before they both hit the drink. The water was a balmy 48 degrees.
